TEARING DOWN THE WALLS

Deck for the story goes here and here and here and here and here

IN THE FALL OF 2010, LYSAUNDRA CAMPBELL CRIED hard for the first time in eight years.

As she was leaning against the shoulder of a stranger at the Impact National Conference in Atlanta GA, she cried out six years of pain and feelings of betrayal toward a father she loved. What she found was peace from the aftermath of domestic violence and the desire to help others find it, too.

Campbell says she spent much of her childhood building walls against the hurt that her father, Nathan, instilled when he abused her mother. Now as a 22-year-old senior at Mizzou, she says she and God are working on tearing them down.

"I don't think I understood grace until I was 20," she says. Once I did, I realized it didn't matter what happened; I could come back from anything."

Campbell became familiar with the concept of abuse and its effect on families when she was just in the second grade. In 1999, after several violent disputes between her parents, Campbell's mother Sandra, moved Campbell, her sister and her brother to her home state of Virginia. Campbell says all she understood at the time was that her mother had split up their family. More here on the background of her family; where were they living, how did her parents meet, what did they do, what was the family like? How did the abuse start and how did it progress? Did LySaundra notice it when she was a kid? Was it hidden or overt?

"I didn't really know what was going on, but at the same time I did want the image of a two-parent home," she says. "I didn't want anyone to look at my life and think anything was different."

Saundra and Nathan, who had recently resigned as a police officer at the Kansas City Police Department, decided to make things work for their family, but Sandra says the abuse never stopped.

Saundra and Nathan, a police officer at the Kansas City Police Department we need to verify this; the police records may be able to confirm decided to make things work for their family, but Sandra says the emotional and physical abuse never stopped.

"I'd come to work where did she work? with my eyes red from crying or staying up late," she says. "People at work knew and said, 'You've got to do something about it.'"

This format will remain consistent for each story page.

ABOUT/RESOURCES

These will be fairly straightforward, information pages. Resources, which we have done in the past (student veterans), could be faith-related here (church listings, support).

THE VIDEO PAGES

I have yet to decide whether I'll have unique pages for the videos, or if I will simply link to them all from the front page of the website (in the bottom slider)>

INTERACTIVE COMPONENTS

Interactivity will be subtle throughout the site. Popup videos and interactive gallery sliders (on the home page and on the navbar) will be the main uses of interactivity.

I also plan to code out the site so that it is responsively designed.
